

Poldark Fans Flock to Cornwall

Camelford, Padstow and St Austell see spike as season three finale approaches

As another series of Poldark comes to a close this weekend (13th August), the UK's leading self-catering holiday company, cottages.com has revealed that the show's influence on holidaymakers around the country remains as strong as ever.

With areas that feature in the show experiencing an impressive uplift in bookings of 13% year-on-year* since the third series aired, it seems Camelford is the destination of choice for viewers of the show, having had an increase of 56% in booked weeks since Ross Poldark hit our screens. Padstow also looks set to welcome an influx of visitors, with bookings to the town up 32% since the show started in early June.

What's more, bookings to coastal properties located within the area, where the show is filmed have also increased by 18% year-on-year, suggesting that the series has inspired more people to visit the coast.

Simon Norton at cottages.com said: "Poldark is an incredibly popular program that showcases Cornwall's beauty in every episode, and for this reason, it's no surprise we have seen a rise in bookings to its filming locations since the beginning of season three. We're also happy to report that the show's legacy looks set to continue into 2018, with bookings to Poldark hotspots such as St Austell already up 28% against last year's statistics."
